

NEWS RELEASE

Date 22nd June 2021

COVID-19 has claimed another victim but this time with the stage production of Nobody Lonesome For Me, the show in which actor and musician, Craig McLachlan was planning his comeback.

The show, scheduled to premiere in Perth in late July, has been postponed until the new year as organisers became increasingly faced with the logistical nightmare and threat to audiences resulting from COVID restrictions.

Apart from Perth, the show was scheduled to roll out across different locations, such as Broken Hill, Tamworth, Adelaide, Hobart, Launceston and Brisbane, over coming months.

“Everyone is extremely nervous, especially theatre owners as a result of COVID,” a disappointed McLachlan said after meeting with the producers (Anthony Kennard and Jenny Loftes) and the director (Vanessa Scammell) of the show.

McLachlan was the star of the show, Nobody Lonesome For Me, which tells the story of the last two hours in the life of legendary country music performer, Hank Williams, who died on New Year’s Eve, 1953.

Tickets purchased to date from all show locations will be fully refunded.

“A lot of fans had expressed on social media how much they were looking forward to the show and the decision to postpone was not taken lightly,” Craig said. “But it will be rescheduled when we are able to be more certain about arrangements and the safety of fans and our team. Don’t worry, Hank is coming.”

Nobody Lonesome For Me hasn’t been the only casualty with news other live performances (Cheap Tricks concert) have been postponed with organisers blaming the slow vaccine rollout in Australia and the unpredictable restrictions.

Performers are finding new ways to reach out to audiences and Craig has promised that he is looking at these options to give fans “an early fix” into the world of Hank Williams.
